Platt's will had declared that his farm bailiff was to enjoy the benefit of working that farm, to his own advantage, so long as he might wish. Apart from these deferred elements, the sale of the Gorddinog estate was concluded in 1956. Eneid Langdon made befitting donations of two items from the Platt private possessions. The large portraits of John and Alice Platt, from the main staircase at Gorddinog, she gave to Platt Brothers & Company Limited. (The Company hung them in the entrance hall at Hartford Works). The family and estates records, which had been kept in the estate office at Gorddinog, she gave to the County Archives at Caernarfon. So did the Platt presence in North Wales finish, a presence, over a span of ninety-nine years, which had left a proud record of benefaction and an indelible mark on the landscape. In formal memory, the presence is preserved in the several stained-glass windows in Christ Church, Llanfairfechan, and in the Church of St. Bodian, Abergwyngregyn.
